Code, § 1281.2]...." (People v. Nuckles (1993) 6 Cal.App.4th 865, 870, 8 Cal.Rptr.2d 546.) Citing People v. Hodson (1983) 149 Cal.App.3d 684, 198 Cal.Rptr. 461, respondent argues that this factor should not have been given great weight. In that case, the defendant was charged with first degree burglary and when the court imposed bail, the court stated, "If there was an intent to commit a felony in this burglary, and if the felony was completed, or attempted, then the defendant would be in violation of bail. If the felony was not completed or attempted, it is my thought that the defendant would not be in violation of bail.'" (Id. at p. 690, 198 Cal.Rptr. 461.) The court held that the language it quoted was not specific enough and remanded for further findings. (Ibid.) But the reasoning in People v. Hodson is inapposite here. In that case, the court had found that the offense was not a felony, but merely a misdemeanor. (Id. at p. 689, 198 Cal.Rptr. 461.) In other words, the trial court found only that the defendant did not have the requisite intent to commit a felony when he entered the residence. However, neither the trial court nor the appellate court engaged in any analysis regarding the requisite intent, perhaps because the matter was not raised on appeal. (Ibid.) Here, the court found that the defendant had all the requisite intent when he entered the residence. Respondent also argues that the trial court did not make an independent analysis of whether the defendant had the ability to make bail. (People v. Smith (1982))
